RATIONALE AND PURPOSE OF THE QUALIFICATION
RATIONALE: Monitoring and evaluation are recognised as the cornerstone for effective programme management and is critical for organisational sustainability (HRDC, 2016). Botswana jumped into the bandwagon of public sector reforms in the 1990s through interventions such as Performance-based Management Systems. The focus was almost entirely on performance enhancement to the neglect of performance measurement through a result-based Monitoring and Evaluation (M&E) framework. However, in 2009, the government decided to mainstream M&E into the development planning regime (ESSP, 2015-2020; NDP 11). Since the M&E tool is still in draft form, Botswana is very favorably circumstanced to learn from others (Bothale, 2015; HRDC, 2016). When monitoring and evaluation is done and applied correctly, it strengthens the basis for managing resources for results (Valadez, 1994). Skills to track and report on monitoring and evaluation remain a critical challenge in the country. In the 2016 Human Resource Development Council Planning Report (HRDC), monitoring and evaluation was flagged as a concern. Pressure on government to spend less and do more is forcing the national treasury to demand closer monitoring and evaluation (NDP 11). Public pressure has pushed the government to mainstream monitoring and evaluation as part of the development planning process in the country (Botswana Vision 2036; Botlhale, 2015). All of these illustrate its importance and the urgent need to develop the requisite skills to support the practice (Botlhale 2010). An industry needs-assessment undertaken in 2019, (see Appendix 1), shows that monitoring and evaluation skill is required in Botswana's economy. In the survey, 88% of respondents indicated that the qualification is relevant, and more than two thirds (67.6%) of the respondent felt the qualification is in high demand. The industry needs survey involved various stakeholders including professional bodies, captains of industry, government and non-government organisations. It was very clear from this survey that the qualification was important.

In the HRDC occupation report (HRDC, 2019), monitoring and evaluation is captured as an essential skill that cuts across various occupations. For instance, education, industrial electronics, agriculturalists, and telecommunication engineers. This illustrates that the qualification is of value to numerous occupational areas.

The rationale for the development and implementation of this qualification is to: (a) develop a qualification, which provides an entry criterion to management and development planning; (b) provide current and prospective project teams with a professional qualification, which is career related; and (c) provide a formal professional qualification, which is consistent with the job profile of development project leaders and managers in the public and private sector.

PURPOSE:

The qualification aims to equip managers across a variety of sectors with the knowledge and skills to successfully design and implement sound monitoring and evaluation systems from qualification/project initiation to close-out. Students get the chance to explore the variety of tools and techniques used to measure project progress and to report outcomes to the appropriate internal and external stakeholders – including donors, funders, supervisors, or the population being served. Students get the chance to design relevant and effective frameworks and learn the required methods to conduct effective data collection, statistical analysis, and reporting. More specifically, graduates are able to:

- Apply concepts, principles, processes and framework for monitoring and evaluation systems in development agendas.
- Use result-based tools for development project planning; and apply monitoring and evaluation tools for qualitative and Design and develop monitoring and evaluation systems and design and conduct and evaluation.
